What's New In?

A Cluetrain has taken place between the Network and the Business. Getting the most out of the web is a new strategy for Corporate America. Companies are shifting their thinking to make websites and web applications relevant for the business, instead of just being a supplement to the business. The Business supports a Cluetrain on the web. The question is: "Where will the consumers go?" Many are concerned with "fairness", in that if the users own the networks, and the companies provide the content, then the companies are the "vultures" gobbling up the profit. "Will the network survive?" The Web has survived for more than a decade, despite outages, crashes, and the fact that there is no central control. The biggest question is: "What will the Web look like in five years?" In this book, a plan for Web infrastructure is laid out, as well as a set of network protocols that will allow companies and people to interact with each other. It is
