What's new:

Screenshots At this point, we've somewhat lifted the veil of secrecy, and we'll be releasing a page with more screenshots as each of the game's features is unveiled. As a result, what you see above are but a small sample of the exciting new fantasy action RPG coming to PS4 later this year. We are confident in saying that there will be plenty for you to dig into.

Summon Monsters! Corpses, pets, beasts, cyborgs — regardless of the form in which they appear before you, the enemies that you face in Summoners War are formidable opponents. But Summoners have unique Elemental Powers, elements that make them more powerful than any other monster. Perhaps the properties of that element exceed your own strength or capabilities? Then it is time to summon a power-up: a powerful special effect that might let you blow a hole in your defense. Summoners can pay attention to their enemies as they yield up their life, choose the optimal moment, and unleash a profound effect.

Demi-Humans You may control an Elemental Creature. But in this game, you are demi-human: the target of your enemies. Your own strength, temperament, and development are just as important as your powers. Your own powers will be reflected in your skill, growth, and character... and that in turn will become the key to summoning powerful new powers in the future.

Play Anywhere, Anytime Summoners War is an online game where information and battle commands are accessible through the network so you can play it without thinking about additional installations. The game also boasts three client installations, which are designed to work well on your home game console, to make your ownership of the game seamless. We plan to go into greater detail with more information until the game's official release later this year. We will continue posting any new information related to the game throughout the development process and it would be a great pleasure to receive your feedback.

The study released Thursday by the Annie E. Casey Foundation and the University of Arkansas found that nearly all parents want their children to have a long-term stable job someday, but that they also want the option of making more money in the short term and doing jobs they enjoy now. When asked if they were willing to work less, most parents said no. But only about half of them said they were OK with their children's working part-time or in school. A third said they would be OK with their children working, say, until they were 18, but 80 percent said they wanted that work to be with a career that would lead to a long-term stable job. About 80 percent of parents said they'd be OK with their children starting a business someday. But two-thirds of parents also said their children's main work right now should be staying at home. Sixty-seven percent said that their children shouldn't work at all. The survey of 2,500 parents with children under age 18 found that younger parents were more likely to want their children to work, with parents ages 25 to 39 less likely to be OK with children working than those who were 55 and up. Older parents were more likely than younger ones to want the option of working part-time or for a shorter period of time. Parents' economic situation was the top reason for their views on child work. Only 19 percent of parents said their children's work should be limited to the home because they can't afford it. But parents with annual household incomes of less than $
