The traditional people have been allowed to use only certain areas with full permission and several tourist lodges. And now that the ecotourism movement in Ecuador is increasing, we will have to protect these areas with new laws to avoid the use of our natural resources without questioning the traditional knowledge of our indigenous people. This new movement is very near to those who lived in this region before the arrival of the Spaniards, who carried out the terror and exterminated numerous species and were slowly decimated by the terrible diseases they brought with them. Before the tourist era was established, it was allowed to use the forest lands without asking them if the traditional community could use them or not. After the touristic era, a balance needs to be created between the right to use it and respect to the environment and species of our forests and our indigenous people. In addition, promoting ecotourism will support the local employment which is often in a very small village and many times is the only source of income. Due to the difficulty of accessing these regions, many tour companies can only provide low quality tours that try to provide their customers with a good night. It is essential to know the native language and more importantly the history of our forests and how
