In the control group, CP injection led to an increase in the liver enzymes (serum alanine transaminase, aspartate transaminase and alkaline phosphatase) to 270, 400 and 720 IU/l, respectively, as well as marked hepatic necrosis. The cyclophosphamide-induced histological changes were minimal in the beta-sitosterol-treated group. These were based on the reduction of serum enzymes and hepatic necrosis. The protective effects of beta-sitosterol on cyclophosphamide were partially due to the antioxidant capacity. In addition, beta-sitosterol potentiated the effects of cyclophosphamide on liver enzymes and histology.. The vehicle slowly climbs the slope, going past houses, plants and more trees.
