OS : Windows 7 HomePremium x86, 64-bitInternet security is an important topic that grows in popularity on a daily basis as news reports of everyday Internet users being victims of fraudulent activity occur. A particular type of fraudulent activity may involve the use of electronic mail or other electronic communications for financial gain. In a typical scenario, a criminal composes an email message announcing an investment opportunity, and directs the message at a recipient. The recipient reads the email and, believing that the email offers him a good investment opportunity, he or she transmits money to the email account associated with the message. However, the investment opportunity is not legitimate and the money is either lost or, more likely, stolen. Such email messages are commonly known as "spoof" messages because they appear to be authentic messages that come directly from a legitimate organization, when they are not. A number of methods have been developed to prevent this type of fraudulent activity. One method, known as “DomainKeys” has been developed by VeriSign, Inc. to detect fraudulent messages. The DomainKeys method operates by verifying the domain name system (DNS) server that provides the destination domain name for internet protocol (IP) addresses of the incoming messages. Messages from domains verified to be legitimate are allowed to
