A blog about how the earth's climate is likely to change in the 21st Century, and what humans can do to prevent dangerous climate change. Tuesday, August 31, 2011 Dr. Doom's biggest attack on UN climate negotiations is on individual right to environmental clean air and clean water Back when I was a university student, I read that the Russians and Americans had agreed to ban the use of Agent Orange in Vietnam. I was shocked by it. Everyone I knew had been pouring the stuff into the jungle. But the US and the Soviets respected each other enough to agree on this deal and at least started the process of reducing casualties. All of my professors, friends, family and neighbors had been getting their dose of the stuff, so they naturally agreed to it. The few people who lived in my city were most likely getting additional benefits from the deal. I was shocked. How could a few people stop everyone else from using the stuff? Dr. Doom is not a scientist, and would not understand this concept. But I suspect that is how he sees the agreement to lower greenhouse gas emissions. Another Sizzling Titles To Preview For Halloween Week In The Horror Blogosphere By Chuck Bennett Halloween week is here, which means you should expect a flood of new content flowing in to the horror blogosphere.
