The mobile selection of a radio cell is to be understood as the signalling to the mobile station (MS) of the radio cell in which the MS is located or intends to move within a given time period. In 3GPP and 3GPP2, the term cell is used as the generic term for all radio cells, while 3GPP defines in addition that the radio cells are connected to a core network. In current mobile communication networks, the call admission control and the overload detection are implemented in the radio base station (e.g. Node B). Hence, the radio cell to which a mobile station is connected is identified before a call is placed. The capacity of the radio cell may be limited, for example, in case of busy number handling. The Mystical and The Manic I wrote "The Mystical and the Manic" for 12th grade English and I'd have to say I still think that it holds up pretty well. The Mystical and the Manic The young girl stood in the empty room, listening to the faint sound of the alarm clock. She ran her finger over the sharp dark lines on the paper that lay before her, thinking of the letters that she would need to memorize, the Greek vocabulary, the English-French dictionary. When the alarm clock rang again, she groaned and with special characters and numbers. the special characters are: !@#\$%^&()_+\\V#=?@, and the numbers are: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 0 This is what I got and it is a bit long: `^(?=.[!@#$%^&()_+\\V#-=?@])(?=.[a-zA-Z])(?=.[0-9]).{8,15}$` Here is the regex sandbox A: This is what you need: `^(?=.[!@#$%^&()_+\\V#-=?@]).{6,}$` It requires: a string that contains at least one of the characters !@#\$%^&()_+\\V#-=?@ A string that contains 6 to 15 of the same character (that's {6,15}). See example Q: Is there a
