for wireless users, we found a list of other wireless internet connections in the same block of offices. in addition to two atheros based links, it lists intel and broadcom-based connections, one of which seems to connect to the qo labs headquarters, and has the businessname of qo labs listed in the access point address field. when the show, which we call the radio show, first broadcast a few months ago in prague, then the radio farda was sponsored by rfe/rl, and we stopped using its tagline around world ipv6 day on june 6th. when this writer called rfe/rls media office in washington, however, on june 7th, to ask whether rfe/rl had any affiliation with the czech agency called case for freedom, i was told “its actually qolabs, the qo labs company, and the true signatory of the radio farda programs is actually rfe/rl.” in an audio interview on the case for freedom’s website, itself, richard n. haass, president of the council on foreign relations, has said that the entity calling itself case for freedom is a “wholly-owned,” “spin-off” of rfe/rl, and that the founder of this entity, allen roth, is a “longtime, steadfast supporter of rfe/rl,” which is rfe/rl. rfe/rl the awardee must be a small business, as defined in far part 13.5.2. the proposal must be submitted by a firm, corporation, trust, partnership, or sole proprietorship (or a legal person formed under the laws of a jurisdiction other than the united states) that is an established business entity with a continuing business presence and a minimum of one year of financial history. the offeror's organizational entity must be a legal person and the offeror must be an individual acting on behalf of the offeror organization.

the policy forum for international security affairs is an organization with an impressive background: the policy forum for international security is a dynamic community of individuals from a wide variety of backgrounds to discuss and debate issues of national security. founded in december 2005, pfisa was formed by a small group of former high level government officials, diplomats and academics to promote the ideas of democracy, human rights, political freedom, and free trade in a world that increasingly is governed without regard to principles of freedom and justice. to better serve our diverse membership we have moved to a new website: the policy forum for international security affairs is a dynamic community of individuals from a wide variety of backgrounds to discuss and debate issues of national security. founded in december 2005, pfisa was formed by a small group of former high level government officials, diplomats and academics to promote the ideas of democracy, human rights, political freedom, and free trade in a world that increasingly is governed without regard to principles of freedom and justice. to better serve our diverse membership we have moved to a new website: there is also something rather odd about the site. the top two icons of the home page, the one to the right of the interview with kambiz tavana and the one to the left of the interview with gary kasparov are both the official seals of rfe/rl, the former a 6-pointed red star and the latter a 4-pointed blue star. the rfe/rl logo is a 5-pointed blue star. the first time i saw this, i noticed that there were only two star-shaped icons so i began to look around the site to see if anyone else had noticed it. this is how i discovered that this was the logo for the policy forum as well. now, i don't normally notice these things but i was shocked to see them on the home page of the policy forum. i thought that the policy forum was in the employ of rfe/rl. that was certainly the impression i had

at the prague conference. i never saw a link to rfe/rl anywhere on the site but i did see links to the rferl website, rferl.org, and to the rferl youtube channel. it was only when i mentioned this to someone at the conference that he told me that the rferl logo on the site belonged to the policy forum rather than rfe/rl. the policy forum logo was also used on the cff logo.
