The risk of intrauterine growth retardation (IUGR) and underweight at term is increased by maternal smoking during pregnancy, but the influence of maternal smoking before the onset of pregnancy is uncertain. We followed a cohort of singleton infants born after a gestational age of 31 weeks and with birth weight less than 2.5 kg to 18 months postterm. The influence of maternal smoking and other risk factors on growth was assessed using hierarchical logistic regression. Maternal smoking during the first trimester was associated with a threefold risk of IUGR compared with infants of non-smokers (adjusted odds ratio, 3.15; 95% confidence interval 1.60-6.25; P = 0.001). Although the risk of underweight at term was increased in infants of smokers compared with non-smokers (adjusted odds ratio, 2.34; 1.26-4.34; P = 0.007), the growth rate at 18 months was not reduced, whereas children of smokers were 40% more likely to be overweight at age 2.5-3.5 years compared with children of non-smokers (adjusted odds ratio, 1.40; 1.01-1.94; P = 0.040). 5ec8ef588b
