A lot of people are really tired of negative research findings that report blacks are twice as likely to be arrested for the sale of crack cocaine as whites. We found that to be accurate. In the present study, those that were arrested for crack cocaine offenses more often carried the diagnosis of cocaine dependence, were arrested more often for cocaine offenses, and there was a positive association between crack cocaine arrest rates and crack cocaine use disorder rates. The commission concluded in 2001 that the crack-to-powder sentencing ratio of 100 to one is excessive in relation to the medical and scientific evidence about the comparative harms of the two drugs, and that the current sentencing system is unable to provide equal justice under law in crack cocaine cases. The Commission also concluded that the current penalties for crack cocaine offenders are not inconsistent with the purposes of the federal sentencing statute, and in fact would achieve its purposes more effectively were they different. meanwhile, in terms of race, we found that blacks were less likely to use either powder cocaine or crack, but when they did, they did so at higher frequencies. some studies have suggested blacks may be addicted to powder cocaine more readily than other races, according to dr. palamar. however, this study does not appear to be consistent with these findings. these findings, in addition to the apparent rarity of crack cocaine use in the us, indicate that blacks are at lower risk of drug use even among those who have used them, which could be attributed to the fact that they are less likely to use the substance in the first place. as a result, they may have less reason to use it repeatedly. they also seem less likely to become addicted to the drug. the findings indicate that black users of either powder cocaine or crack were less likely to have a history of drug use and were less likely to have been arrested. this could be a result of the stigma associated with drugs among blacks and a result of a higher prevalence of substance use disorders among white americans, as well as a distrust of authority by many black americans. we don't have a definite reason, but it seems that blacks are less likely to use crack because they are less likely to use any kind of powder cocaine than whites, he adds. it is possible that blacks are also less likely to use crack as they are less likely to be involved in the crack business, making their interaction with drug dealers unlikely. dr. palamar and his colleagues also note that these findings do not indicate that crack use itself is not a concern. some studies have suggested that crack smoking may be even more damaging than using powder cocaine or heroin, but they also point out that not all crack users are regular smokers and that most of these studies are based on self-reporting. 5ec8ef588b
