At the end of the day, how much data can you actually lose if you had your hard drive crash, or how much money would you save by recovering data that could be lost anyway? However, you should remember that every lost piece of data can mean the difference between success and failure in business. Sometimes, it just takes a good set of tools and the right skills to recover that data.

Backup software is one of the best tools you can have, and your choice should not be based solely on price. The software you choose should not only make it easier to transfer files from one computer to another, but it should also be flexible and give you the ability to save copies to different media, including cloud storage sites. All you want is a simple and fast FTP client

In fact, you can be just as happy with something as simple and streamlined as a regular FTP client. Backtrack 5 is a Linux-based operating system (OS), built using open-source software. It is primarily used as a live CD or live USB and can also be used as an offline operating system.
